Firewall drink

Oh, Fireball. What an embarrassment to alcohol. The cheap and syrupy cinnamon mixture was made for newbie drinkers and Solo cup college parties and that's as far as it should have made it in the booze scene. Yet somehow it remains a popular order at bars nationwide. But this is wrong. So completely, sadly, and utterly wrong. Sure it might serve its purpose in a big batch Jell-O shot , but if it's your favorite booze, then you really need to sort out your priorities. Because there are more than enough reasons to not drink Fireball. Actually make that Big Red gum soaked in pee. Just the thought of sipping this syrupy mess is enough to make you gag and start dry-heaving. And these grandmas trying it for the first time agree with me. Any drink that ends in "balls" or "nuts" is best left behind. Same goes for the eye-rollâ€"inducing fragile masculinity of the"Man-mosa. You know who I'm talking about: the bros with popped-collar Polos and gingham button-ups, finance guys who always cut you but somehow touch your lower back while doing it, sorority girls and college freshmen with fake IDs, obviously looking to get plastered on a Thursday night, juice heads bragging about how much they can lift. The makers of Fireball, Sazerac, are based in Louisiana. So there's no need to use the United Kingdom's spelling of whiskey. According to the brand, the drink contains Canadian Whisky. Our friends to the north apparently drop the 'e', hence the spelling choice, but we're not sold. At 66 proof, Fireball has 20 percent less alcohol than a true whiskey, which typically clocks in at somewhere between 86 and proof. No one orders a single shot of Fireball because it's cheap and weak and apparently people like to torture themselves. And so, since it's only ever had in excess, it inspires ridiculously drunk behaviorâ€"like peeing in public and starting fights with the bouncer. Hate to break it to you, Fireball, but no good story ever started with "Well, we were drinking Fireball It's WhiskyWednesday. You know what's next. Sugar and spice and everything not so nice. The morning after drinking this nasty concoction should be enough to make you quit it for good. A fact so unsettling to Europeans that sales of the sickly sweet booze were "temporarily halted" in Norway, Sweden, and Finland, which Fireball says was "due to a small recipe-related compliance issue. It's a slightly less toxic compound than ethylene glycol, which wasâ€"until recentlyâ€"most often used in anti-freeze. According to the FDA, propylene glycol is "generally recognized as safe" when used in food "at levels not to exceed current good manufacturing practice," but nonetheless, Fireball removed the chemical from its recipe. Fireball Cinnamon Whisky is a mixture of Canadian whisky , cinnamon flavoring and sweeteners that is produced by the Sazerac Company. As of , Fireball is among the top selling whisky brands in the United States. According to the official Fireball website, the product was developed in Canada in the mids, and for a long time was little known outside of Canada. Fireball was originally part of a line of flavored schnapps developed by Seagram in the mids. The Sazerac Company purchased the brand rights and formula from Seagram in It was marketed as " Dr. McGillicuddy's Fireball Whisky". Aloysius Percival McGillicuddy, allegedly more commonly referred to as "the shot doctor" [3] who was "born" in the year An April article in Bloomberg Business Week said "It's also one of the most successful liquor brands in decades. Several national country music acts would perform at the establishment during this time and inspired multiple references in many popular songs [2] [9] In , it became one of the top ten most popular liquors, displacing Jose Cuervo tequila. The brand's label was designed by Ross Sutherland, who's also designed labels for Black Magic rum, Wheatley Vodka, and some other brands. Fireball is usually consumed as a " straight shot " or on the rocks. There are, however, various cocktails that use Fireball as an ingredient, [13] and the company has encouraged a variety of such cocktails through its official website and social media channels. As of , Fireball does not use propylene glycol in any of their products. There is a variety of cinnamon liquor products available and are a popular form of flavored liquor. They include cinnamon vodka , tequila , and bourbon. In early , the Sazerac company sued Hood River Distillers over the allegedly confusing trade name and marketing of its product, SinFire Cinnamon Whisky. In , the Sazerac company filed a lawsuit complaining that the Jack Daniel's division of Brown-Forman had infringed its Fireball trademark while marketing Tennessee Fire , a cinnamon flavored Tennessee whiskey.
