Long before the term applied to angular mid-engine European metal, the term "supercar" was coined to describe the original Pontiac GTO. The world-beating performance it offered inspired a generation. Although the original GTO will always be credited with creating the muscle car genre, no car defines the muscle car era better than the Pontiac GTO, our Car of the Year. In retrospect, it's easy to look back at the '68 GTO's win as our editors being swayed by "supercar" performance over all else, but the truth is that the GTO's virtues run much deeper than that. The GTO was an engineering marvel for its time. Ignoring its certainly underrated hp cubic-inch 6. Basically a piece of hard, painted foam resistant to impacts up to 4 mph, the bumper was so durable that we depicted a staffer swinging a hammer at the GTO and featured photos of the car running into a bollard, looking no worse for wear. The Endura bumper allowed Pontiac to revolutionize design, we said, by opening up new possibilities for front bumper shapes and colors not previously possible. Camaro ZL1 vs. We were of course impressed by the performance, too. The Pontiac could obviously hustle in a straight line, too. Our three-speed automatic tester ran from mph in 7. That Pontiac was able to coax hp out of this V-8 in the '60s is impressive, especially considering muscle cars didn't begin to crest hp again until the early s. Freed of modern emissions equipment, the breathes freely and deeply, and it still launches the GTO with the ferocity of a current muscle car. Dipping into the throttle and letting the V-8 trumpet produces the same sort of giggles a Tesla Model S PD does when launchedâ€"it's pure, silly, pointless fun. If only the drum brakes, and steering were up to the task. The former are woefully inadequate for a car with 35 hp, let alone , and the latter is fingertip light with little in the way of feedback. How all you baby boomers survived the late '60s and early '70s driving these wild beasts is beyond me. Even when we'd clocked thousands of miles, the GTO still appealed to us as a 'new' car, with the thought of it becoming 'old' a nearly impossible happening. Close Ad. Watch Originals. The owner purchased the car nine years ago in its restored condition and has used it for pleasure drives since. That original color was re-sprayed during the restoration. There was no extensive rust repair known to have been performed on the body, which remains visibly free of corrosion. The paint appears to maintain a good shine, with only a couple of cracks in the original-style lacquer and some scratching just behind the passenger door, from apparent rubbing contact. The brightwork and glass show well, with no cracks or chips in any of the glass. The seals and moldings are also in good condition, with no known leaks. The factory hood tachometer works normally. Additionally, the white convertible top is in very good condition, with no splits or tears, and it operates normally, according to the seller. The front and rear seats were recovered at the time and look to remain in excellent condition, with essentially no visual wear, including the hard seatbacks, which show no apparent scratches. The carpet is believed to be original and also appears to be in good condition, but shows some wear commensurate with its apparent age. Per the seller, all the interior lights work and all the gauges work normally, along with the heater and air-conditioning system. The engine is the original, numbers-matching horsepower, cubic-inch V-8, which has about 5, miles on a stock-type rebuild. The owner reports it runs very well, with no smoke at startup and no leaks. The engine has an aftermarket MSD ignition coil and plug wires and there is some visible discoloration on the cylinder heads and intake manifold that is consistent with Pontiac V-8 engines that see regular operation. It reportedly shifts smoothly, with no known issues or leaks. No known leaks or weeps have been observed from the rear axle, either. The chassis and suspension were restored and rebuilt, respectively, during the restoration, which was about 10 years ago. The car has been driven approximately 5, miles since then and the chassis and suspension components remain in good working order, with no known problems, leaks or needs, according to the seller who also reports smooth, vibration-free driving, with no excessive play in the power steering system and no grabbing or wandering when braking. The owner reports they are about 10 years old and retain approximately 80 percent of their tread. This vehicle will be sold with the proper Alberta-issued documents for proper transfer of ownership. They do paint a relatively positive picture, as the car looks like it is in pretty fair condition. The condition of the interior looks really encouraging, but it will look a lot better once the carpet has been returned to the house from which it was removed. Apart from that, the dash and pad look good, as do all of the upholstered surfaces. The owner refers to this as a basic GTO, so that means that under the hood is the hp ci V8 engine, which is backed by a 4-speed manual transmission. Once again, we really are in the dark here, as the owner gives us no information on the state of the engine, or whether it even turns freely. The outwards appearance of this GTO looks quite promising, and if this does turn out to be a fair indication of the actual vehicle condition, then this is a car with a lot of potential. Good examples are fetching some good money today, so it looks like it would be worth the effort to try to contact the owner and see if he is willing to answer a few questions. I see evidence of rodent activity. For some reason, the pesky critters love to spread bits of pink fiberglass insulation around. Certainly one of the least informational of eBay listings for a potentially popular car. Also a minimal info listing. When I bought my Corvette, it had that same shag carpeting in it, which got replaced with a correct carpet set. And, yes, when the rodents invaded the HVAC system, the fan housing was filled with pink insulation from the garage. That firewall looks funnyâ€¦but hey â€" what do I know? Not sure if this is being sold by the ownerâ€¦. The aftermarket Sun tach looks out of place in the dash, but at least there is a tach. Spirited bidding with so few pictures and information equals having the discretionary income to roll the dice and hope for the best. The firewall does look odd but at closer look, the entire engine seems to be pushed to the drivers side and the upper radiator hose agrees. Plus is been sprayed black and original would have been the same as the body color. I was always told that this style was called Judge and the older square style was the Goat?
